Corn Belt Offers New Egg Producing Program

A new Commercial egg producing program was announced today by Freda Roth Greenan, President of Corn Belt Hatcheries. According to Mrs. Greenan the program will offer Southwest Arkansas farmers an opportunity to get into the egg producing business at small risk to themselves.

Under this program the company will furnish Hy-Line chickens, all feed consumed by the chickens and all vaccines and remedies; the farmer will furnish the buildings, equipment, labor in caring for the chickens, the litter and the utilities. The chickens and the eggs will belong to the company. The farmer will be paid for each egg produced. Marketing the eggs will actually be the company's responsibility.

Mrs. Greenan stated that this new program for producing eating eggs was being undertaken to foster and develop the poultry industry in Southwest Arkansas. To develop new egg marketing channels and to provide opportunities for qualified farmers to get into the egg producing business with little financial risk to themselves.

To qualify for this egg program, a farmer must be able to provide suitable housing and equipment. House plans and equipment specifications will be provided by Corn Belt Hatcheries. An adequate water supply for the use of the chickens must be available and the farmer must be willing to care for the chickens according to the directions of the company.

This program is available to farmers who can put in not less than 2,000 hens nor more than 2,400 the first year. Complete details are available at Corn Belt Hatcheries.

"We noticed in the Hope Star that the population of Hempstead County declined nearly 20% during the last five years," said Mrs. Greenan. "Most of this decline has taken place in the country. The reason for it seems clear. The farmer, in Southwest Arkansas, is having a hard time making a decent living."

"We in the poultry industry know the chicken business is moving South. Perhaps this plan will help the farmers in this area get into the egg production business and find for themselves a new cash income that will provide a secure future right on their own farms," she concluded.

Merchant-Farmer Shot to Death

JOHNER, (AP) Wallace Miller, prominent northeast Arkansas merchant and farmer, was shot to death here today.

Dep. Sheriff Dave Young said at Osceola that Miller's wife, who was hospitalized at West Memphis after the shooting, would be questioned.

Miller was shot by a pistol, Young said, and was dead on arrival at a West Memphis hospital. Hospital officials said Mrs. Miller was in his late 40s.

Details of the shooting were not available immediately.

NEW YORK (AP) — Nine years ago Eli Wallach was on the verge of becoming a postman. Today director Elia Kazan predicts he will become "the screen's next most exciting actor."

Wallach, a former Army medic and veteran of 18 Broadway plays, won national attention as a star in his first movie, "Baby Doll," the controversial drama of lust, frustration and revenge among a group of human beings weevils in the Deep South.

He says he doesn't quite understand all the fuss and clamor raised over "Baby Doll."

"Certainly, it isn't any indictment of the South itself," he said. "The same things could happen in almost any setting in the Midwest, in New England, or on Broadway."

The slender, mobile-faced actor paused reflectively, then said, "It's a little like asking somebody to pick his teeth before he's had his meal, but it is a real happen on Broadway!"

Hollywood made a quick convert of Wallach, one of the charter members of the Actors Studio here, a professional laboratory of the theater which is highly praised by some as "the town's school of acting."

"I like the movies," Wallach said. "I used to have the typical New York actor's idea of the films—that they got a handsome filling station operator, had him do the multiplication table in his head, and called it acting."

"But I've found film work exciting, and challenging. The hardest thing in getting accustomed to was the fact that the scenes aren't shot consecutively, as they take place in a play, where the emotions are built up as you go along."

House Group Sets Out to Cut Budget

By WILLIAM F. ARBOGAST

WASHINGTON (UP)—The House Appropriations Committee set out today to try to whittle down President Eisenhower's request to spend $71,807,000,000 during the next fiscal year.

One day after receiving Eisenhower's budget message, subcommittee members began scanning behind closed doors the fiscal needs of the Interior, Post Office and Treasury departments.

Members hope to chop substantial sums from the $73,300,000,000 in requests for new appropriations, some of which would carry over to later years.

Some Democrats and some Republicans complained about the size of the budget for the year starting next July 1, referring to it as inflationary.

And Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey cautioned that "we will have a depression that will make your hair curl" unless the government cuts down on its spending. He added that the probably would quit his job if, in the event of a depression, the Eisenhower administration tries to fight it with methods involving deficit spending.

He said he wasn't criticizing the administration for the size of the budget. But he said the rising trend of federal budgets "should promptly be stopped."

The size of the budget, a record for a peace year and the fifth highest in the nation's history, spurred congressional demands for sharp cuts in appropriations, on which spending is based.

The President forecast a year-end surplus of $1,600,000,000 which he said would be applied toward reduction of the 272-billion-dollar national debt, now costing more than seven billions annually in interest charges.

Roast Beef, Steak Best Market Buy

By The Associated Press
Roast beef and steak will be featured in many grocery stores this weekend.

Rib roasts seem to be the most popular cuts in the beef line, although chuck roast, pot roast and ground beef also will be specials in some stores. In feature positions are sirloin and porterhouse.

"Ham" and lamb also will get some play but most cuts of pork are vanishing from the bargain counter.

Outstanding vegetable buys are the root crops still available in many sections from nearby fields: carrots, beets, parsnips, cabbage and turnips.

Western carrots and new cabbage from western or southern fields are rated good buys by produce men, along with beans, lettuce, endive, escarole, sweet potatoes and peppers.

Onions are getting more expensive now, as is customary during the winter, but they still are good buys in most places. Celery is coming down in price.

Storage potatoes from the Maine fall crop are moderately priced in most places. Supplies of new, red potatoes are starting to trickle in from Florida, but are light so far.

The citrus trio of oranges, grapefruit and tangerines head the bargain list of fruits, although nearby, ripe apples are still attractively priced in some sections. Cantaloupes, which used to be strictly a summer item, are available in limited quantities in some places, but they're most a luxury item.

RESOLVED
I will secure adequate hospital insurance. Demand Non-Cancellable policy. Secure Double Value policy, written by Old Liberty Insurance Company. Only policy that doubles in value after 12 months.

Speculation on Change in Hungary

VIENNA (UP)—Western

observers speculated today on the sudden emergence of Minister of State Gyorgy Marosán as chief spokesman for the Communist Hungarian regime.

There have been recurrent reports, puppet Premier Janos Kadar has fallen from grace with the Kremlin because of failure to win a semblance of popular support.

Others noted it was Marosán, and not Kadar, who made the announcement of Communist China's $50 million aid offer to stricken Hungary, half in goods and half in the form of a loan.

The announcement came on the eve of the arrival in Budapest from Poland of Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai on his tour of the East European satellites.

Marosán accompanied Kadar to Moscow for talks with the Kremlin leaders and Chou recently. Since his return, he has appeared to become more prominent in the Communist regime.

Kadar, on the other hand, continues to remain silent publicly. Most government decrees have been issued by the so-called presidential council.

challenge. It isn't a medium to sneer at, once you work in it. Wallace, son of an immigrant Brooklyn candy store owner, wanted to act from the time as a child he used to pitch a blanket over his bed and pretend he was a "member of the Foreign Legion, dying of thirst in the desert."

"In a hot Brooklyn summer, that wasn't hard to pretend. He spent five years in the Army Medical Corps, entering army service and emerging a captain following overseas duty ranging from Hawaii to North Africa, France and Germany."

From 1945 to 1948 he appeared in several Broadway plays but he had to work as a swimming instructor and camp counselor to keep alive.

"In 1948 I thought I had failed as an actor and was about to apply for a Civil Service job with the post office," he said. "When director Josh Logan saw a play I put on for the Actors Studio and put me into the cast of 'The Roberts'."

After that Wallace started in such plays as "The Rose Tattoo," "Camino Real," and "The Tea House of the August Moon," in which he played the role of Sakhi over 800 times here and in London.

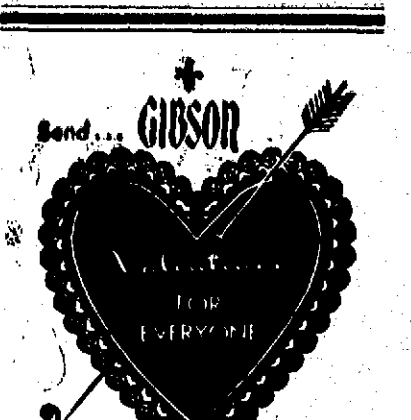

Wallace has no desire to be a matinee idol, would rather go on "creating interesting character roles until they cart his bones to the graveyard."

"I don't want to be pointed out when I walk along the street. I enjoy a feeling of anonymity."

Wallace, equally facile in roles demanding a comic touch or emotional intensity, is now in the $50,000 to $100,000-a-year bracket, but says security is no longer a goal for him.

"Acting is an insecure, crazy business by its very nature," he said. "What makes an actor any way? I think it's the desire to be something you are not. Actually, it's a form of illness."

Pro-Football Decision in Hands of Court

By WHITNEY SHOEMAKER

WASHINGTON (AP)—Professional football's freedom from federal anti-trust laws rested with the Supreme Court today.

The court heard arguments yesterday in a session highlighted by Chief Justice Warren's discussion of the reserve clause used in professional sports contracts.

The suit raising the point was brought by William Radovich of North Hollywood, Calif., a former lineman for the University of Southern California and the Detroit Lions of the National Football League. He charged the league with violating anti-trust laws.

District and Circuit Courts in San Francisco threw out Radovich's suit for $105,000 in damages from the league and some of its member clubs. Radovich, now a retail grocer, contended he was blacklisted for jumping in 1946 from the Lions to the Los Angeles Rams of the now-extinct All American Conference.

Radovich charged the NFL seeks to monopolize professional football. But the lower federal courts, in dismissing his suit, held that football, like baseball, is entitled to exemption from the anti-trust laws. The Supreme Court has so ruled in the case of baseball.

Among other things, Radovich complained of the contract reserve clause, which binds a player to a club. Such provisions are standard in both baseball and football.

In the course of the rival lawyers' arguments Warren suggested:

"Isn't there a difference between the reserve clause in football and baseball?"

He said a baseball player starting out on a pro career may sign with a team of his choosing and that not till then is the player tied by the clause.

"In football," Warren went on, "a man gets no chance. He plays for the team that drafts him or he doesn't play at all. Here you are taking college boys who never even said they want to be in professional football."

The Chief Justice emphasized he wasn't taking a position on the question. He said he simply wondered whether a trial court shouldn't hear evidence on both sides. But he didn't commit himself on that just yet.

The court won't issue its decision on whether to order a trial of Radovich's suit for several weeks.

Braves Are in Market for 2nd Baseman

MILWAUKEE (AP)—The Milwaukee Braves are in the market for a second baseman who can hit 270 or better. If they find him, they might become favorites in the National League race.

Braves General Manager John Quinn discussed the 1957 campaign and Milwaukee trouble spots last night in a talk at the Press Club.

As for the race, Quinn said he saw it as a contest between the Braves, Brooklyn, Cincinnati and possibly St. Louis.

Second base and left field, where Danny O'Connell and Bob Thomsen labored last year, are the trouble spots. If able to rub out either one, or both of the weak positions, the Braves probably could take the field in April in a jump ahead of the competition.

Quinn said, "If O'Connell could add 30 points to his batting average I think nothing more could be desired." The second baseman hit .239 in 1956.

"Don't be surprised if you see some new names on our club this year," Quinn said, and then added that he didn't mean they would have to be players with established reputations. They could come from the farm system.

Mentioned as possible future Milwaukee second sackers are Gene Baker of the Cubs and Red Schoendienst of the New York Giants.

Jones Favored to Defeat Smallwood

CLEVELAND (AP)—Ralph (Tiger) Jones, rated No. 3 among mid-dleweight contenders, is looking beyond tonight's fight toward a possible chance at the title some time this year.

Jones, who lost to Gene Fullmer in a close fight last April, will be facing Hardy Smallwood of Brooklyn in tonight's 10-rounder.

Jones wants another crack at Fullmer, who took the middleweight championship from Sugar Ray Robinson some nine months after his fight with Jones here.

Jones, of Yonkers, N. Y., is a heavy favorite to whip Smallwood. The Brooklyn boxer has lost four in a row and has an 18-8 record. Jones is 41-17-3.

The bout replaces a scheduled welterweight title fight between Johnny Sacton and champion Carmen Basilio. The Sacton-Basilio bout was postponed because of an injury to Basilio's right hand. NBC will broadcast and telecast at 10 p. m.

SMU Could Move Up in National Cage Ranks

By JOHN GRIFFIN

United Press Sports Writer

Southern Methodist, once again the Southwest's top candidate for the national basketball championship, shoots for its ninth straight victory tonight in one of four games involving conference leaders.

The Mustangs, currently ranked as the nation's No. 4 team and anxious to move up at the expense of third-ranked Kentucky, can push their season record to 15-1 with a triumph over Texas tonight, the lone defeat coming against Kentucky on the winners' court.

Kentucky, with an 11-3 record, opened the door for a possible SMU advance when it was upset Monday by Tulane.

SMU will be risking a perfect 4-0 Southwest conference record in this home game in its drive for a third straight league title. A loss would give Baylor (3-1) the chance to tie for the lead by beating Rice tomorrow night.

First place also will be at stake tonight in the Pacific Coast Conference, Ivy League, and Skyline Conference.

Washington, tied for second in the P.C.C. with a 4-0 mark, can tie the pace-making California (3-0) by beating Stanford.

Princeton risks its 3-0 Ivy

SMU Could Move Up in National Cage Ranks

League mark against defending league champion Dartmouth (2-1). A Dartmouth triumph would leave both teams tied for Yale with first place at 3-1, and Columbia could then make it a four-way deadlock by beating Cornell.

Brigham Young, ranked 10th nationally, risks its 3-0 skyline mark against Utah State. If the Cougars lose, Utah (2-1) can tie for first by beating Montana tomorrow night.

In other leading games Furman is at Clemson, George Washington is at Washington and Lee, Tulane is at Louisiana State, and Colorado State is at Montana State.

Bradley, the nation's 14th ranked team, spurred to its fifth straight Missouri Valley triumph, 81-61, over Houston, and Creighton, extended its winning streak to four straight by beating Drake, 74-60, in the leading games of a sparse Thursday schedule.

Forwards Billy Joe McDade and Glenn Morse scored 31 points between them to lead Bradley to its easy win over Houston, while Jim Berry, with 20 points, was high man for Creighton.

St. Peter's beat Adelphi, 64-73, to win its eleventh straight game of the season. The New Jersey Peacocks now have a 17-game winning streak, including six last season.

A DOCTOR for BLUE JAY COVE

Alex got his fire going, and they gathered about it appreciatively. Now and then a rain drop hissed into the flames.

"Don't wonder," growled Alex, "with a perigee tide going across the roof. Must be full moon, then, height of this tide!"

Jake leaned toward him with a cigarette. "I take it you were a Navy man," he said quietly. Jake's pleasantly handsome face was relaxed and quiet; his gray eyes were keen.

Alex laughed. "Two years. Man picks up a load of salt in that time, but hasn't a chance to jettison enough of it to help." He looked from Marcy to the man at her side. "I thought your name was Leo," he told the stranger, who had shared too many excitements with them to seem at all strange.

Jake shook his head. "I'd never stand still to be called Leo," he drawled.

Marcy and Jake sat side by side upon the couch. Marcy's golden hair shone in the firelight, her red dress no brighter than her parted lips, no gayer than her scarlet cheeks and her shining eyes. Jake held one of her hands in his, and, shoulders touching, they talked together, now eagerly, now softly or just sat there, bemused. A soft smile, a swift glance, a lingering look.

Cass sighed. The storm had brought them together, and held them in the storm which with befuddled the house, but, like Aunt Cordy, nothing reached them. They, and their love, lay dead-center, like the eye of a hurricane.

In the kitchen, Alex's strong wrist and sharp knife laid ham back into paper thin slices of mouth-watering pink; he turned then to the turkey. Cass counted her "house" mentally and set out the proper number of snack trays. "D'you suppose you might be needed at the hospital?" she asked Alex. "The phone's dead—I tried it a minute ago."

"I'd not go out in this flood again," asserted Alex. "Besides, Matt's there."

"Is he?"

"He was when I left." As recently as three o'clock Alex had heard him talking on the phone. "And Sue's there," Alex continued. "She said they'd look out for things at the hospital if I thought I could get here to do what I have been doing, care for the out-patients."

She was putting food upon a larger tray to carry to the living room when a stumbling, tumbling racket came from the service porch. Alex strode to the back door, unlocked and opened it, his hand ready to assist the man who fell inward, his eyes bulging, his voice lost in a breathless gurgling. He was half-drowned, his felt hat and his coat were soaked black with water.

"Bart!" cried Alex. "What on earth...?" He glanced around at Cass, who stood frightened.

"Hospital porter," Alex explained. "What's wrong, Bart?"

Finally the man managed to speak—enough, anyway, that Alex got his message. The doctor was needed at the hospital. Miss Francy had sent Bart for him.

"It's plain, we lost doors!" Negro concluded in a final burst of words.

And Alex laughed, his calm strength a comfort to everyone. "I'll believe you, Bart," he said, "and I'll go over. Do you want to stay here, or come back with me?"

"I better go back—their's plenty trouble at the hospital!"

No light shone in the hospital, and Alex groaned. That probably was the emergency. The ambulance was giving trouble. The ambulance was giving trouble. The ambulance was giving trouble.

light in hand, he went around to the back entrance, and shed his soaked outer garments in the lobby.

"Better put yourself through the mop wringer," he told Bart. The Negro's teeth chattered together. "I'll get you a warm-up," Alex promised. He did this, going to the medicine closet before he more than spoke to the floor nurse at the desk.

"What the trouble?" he asked then.

"Oh, Alex—" came Francy's voice, and the whirr of her chair wheels down the hall. Alex turned his light that way. She was in a panic, her eyes stared roundly, her head shook with a palsy of fear. "Everything—the awful storm—and no lights—and a window fell on Mr. Graham's hand—he's bleeding terribly—and Matt—" she gulped and gasped. Alex reached for another glass and filled it from the bottle he still held.

"I don't want whiskey," sobbed Francy.

The basement's flooded, doctor, the nurse said quietly. Down the hall he could see another white-clad girl, with a flashlight, moving in and out of the rooms. Praise God for nurses! thought the doctor fervently.

He must decide on what to tackle first.

"Matt's nowhere around," Francy was telling him in an abused whine. "This awful storm—I thought the roof would be blown right off! And Sue in no condition to help with the patients."

"Sue?" shouted Alex, louder than he'd expected his voice to come. "What's wrong with her?"

The whiskey was helping Francy. She had straightened in her chair, and now made a vague, tossing gesture with her head. "Goodness, Alex," she cried, "I don't know what's wrong—probably someone spoke sharply to her."

Alex leaned over the wheel chair. "Someone named Francy?" he asked.

"Good Lord, Alex, you all should be used to me by now!" (To Be Continued)

Ewbank Gets Another Year With Colts

BALTIMORE (AP)—Three years and four days ago, Wilbur (Weeb) Ewbank came to the Baltimore Colts with the sole idea to start a "racing" team in the National Football League. Today, he had a one-year reprieve to get that idea in high gear.

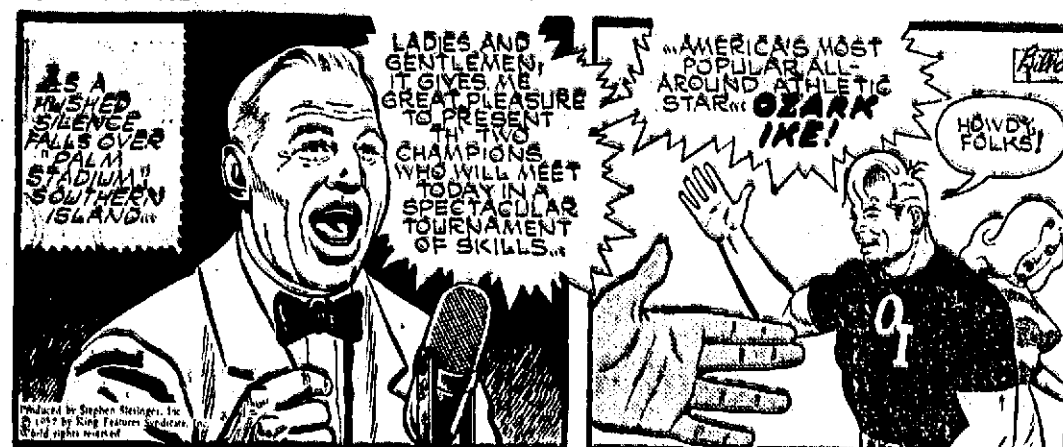

Ending weeks of speculation that the poly-poly football scholar was through in Baltimore,

THE BEST CROWD TO FOLLOW IS THE CROWD GOING TO CHURCH

There's No Evil There Except What You Carry With You

PENETRATION

Drive the nail into the board... that is penetration! You may be sure it won't enter of its own accord. It must be driven with sufficient, well-concentrated, properly directed energy. It takes a real artisan to wield a hammer like that. It takes a genuine God to penetrate some of our lives the way He does, too. Jesus "hit the nail on the head" when he said, "There is a way that seemeth right to a man, but the end thereof is the way of death." The Great Carpenter teaches us the fine art of living... how to flex the wrist to give the proper blow... to hold the tongue and protect a good name... to give a faithful witness and save a soul... to lose yourself in a cause infinitely bigger than yourself. Go to church Sunday and drive that nail straight and true. That's penetration!
